COURT ROOM, FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 30—Bruno Richard Hauptmann took the witness stand at 10:04 a. m. today for further re-direct examination. He looked fine after already having undergone seventeen hours of questioning. It was Hauptmann's fourth day on the stand and the 21st day of the trial.

Hauptmann swung across the room to the witness chair with a little confident stride. He wore his enigmatic half smile as chief defense counsel Edward J. Reilly resumed re-direct examination.

Reilly opened by inquiring about the time Hauptmann worked as a carpenter at the Majestic Apartments in New York City in 1932.

"Did you go down to the Majestic Apartments in the Bronx a week or two before March 1, 1932, to look for work?" Reilly asked.

"Yes," Hauptmann replied. "That is, I go to an agency on Sixth avenue. I think it was about February 27th. I got a letter back from them about the 1st."

"That sent you to the Apartment?" Reilly asked.

"Yes," replied Hauptmann. Reilly asked Hauptmann if he was right or left handed and the witness replied, "right-handed."

The defense attorney suddenly asked:

"Was there ever at any time, anything improper between you and Mrs. Grete Henckel?"

"No," said Hauptmann firmly.

Reilly asked Hauptmann why he had sent for a German-American dictionary after being placed in Hunterdon County Jail here.

"I am reading some books, some English books, and have some trouble to understand," said the pale defendant, who was now very solemn.

Hauptmann was asked about the

As Mrs. Hunter called a number, the guest having that particular number read the verse, which told Mrs. Hunter where to find her gift. Games were played, and a buffet supper was served.

Those attending: Mrs. Delbert Lynn, Mrs. Harry Bauroth, Mrs. Jennie Niles; Misses Verna Milnor, Gertrude Murphy, Harriet Reynolds, Margaret Fox, Isabel Niles, Miriam Niles; Mrs. Edward Hunter, Bristol; Mrs. Leo Gould, Miss Genevieve Ensig, Miss Helen Cornely, Edgely; Mrs. Gofus, Miss Ann Gofus and Miss Dorothy Young, Trenton.

REAL ESTATE BOARD URGES CHANGE IN SYSTEM

Claim Property Carries Unjust
Share of the Tax
Load

CITES ITS ARGUMENTS

The Bucks County Real Estate Board is conducting a campaign against what is claimed to be unfair taxation of real estate. The board is releasing each week for publication in the county newspapers, an article in which is set forth the board's arguments for a change in the taxation system.

The first article follows:

The subject of taxation and especially on real estate is a topic much discussed and from time to time different small organizations have tried to bring about some help to real estate owners but without any great success so far.

The Bucks County Real Estate Board is endeavoring through a series of weekly articles to bring before real estate owners, pertinent questions confronting them and the work being carried on.

Three outstanding organizations of Pennsylvania have agreed to co-operate in a tax reduction program to relieve the burden on real estate. The Pennsylvania State Grange, The Pennsylvania Tax Justice League and the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association are co-operating through a Joint Tax Conference Committee and are advocating the following four major plans:

- I. No School Taxes on Real Estate.
- II. Tax Limitation on Real Estate Which Will Fix a Maximum Millage Rate Which Taxing Bodies Cannot Exceed For Any Purpose.
- III. A Constitutional Convention to Revise the Present Constitution.
- IV. Abatement of Tax Penalties, Interest and Costs on Delinquent Taxes and Providing For The Payment of Delinquent Taxes Over a Five Year Period With the Provision That Current Taxes Must Be Paid During That Time.

1.—Education is the sovereign duty of the State and the cost should be borne by the state. There is no relation between Real Estate and education, and the present system of calling upon real property for practically the entire cost of schools is unfair, inequitable, unwise and unless changed may seriously hamper the proper education of every child. The schooling of our children is the duty of society in which we have our being.

2.—Many States now have tax limitation on real estate; namely, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Washington, Michigan and others—and many States will soon vote on this important question. As long as taxing bodies must assess real estate for the major portion of the cost of local government, they will continue to do so. This type of legislation is needed to force other forms of wealth to pay their just share.

3.—Many of the present abuses can only be corrected through statutory laws or amendments to existing laws. Present methods of taxation, particularly local taxation, are based on laws as old as our government. In the days when real property was the only form of wealth, the system was probably fair, but now that real estate is only one-third the wealth of the State, it is only fair that the present and archaic system be changed and a Constitutional Convention in necessary to bring about needed adjustments. There are over five thousand taxing units in the State of Pennsylvania. In many cases, consolidation of taxing units could be effected and a constitutional convention could make this possible as well as correct the evils of duplications of assessing and collecting agencies, fee offices, and many other abuses that have crept into our worn-out and archaic system.

4.—The enactment of a law providing for abatement of tax penalties, interest and costs over a five-year period would assist many home and farm owners to retain possession of their properties. With the provision that current taxes must be paid to take advantage of this legislation, there would be no opportunity of such an act developing into a "racket."

WAR GAS, CHLORINE, FOUND AID IN COMBATTING CANCER, NOW ESTABLISHED AS HEREDITARY

Another Wonder of Soviet Research Laboratories Revealed
By American Investigation

(This is the third of four articles dealing with extraordinary experiments made by scientists in the Soviet Union.)
By Lindsey Parrott
(International News Service Staff Correspondent)

MOSCOW, Jan. 30.—(INS)—Chlorine, the poisonous gas that wiped out thousands of soldiers during the World War, has been enlisted in the Soviet Union as an ally in the campaign against one of the greatest peace-time scourges.

Chlorine, inhaled in pure form, kills. But chlorine, in a concentration of one to 180,000 parts of air, yields an almost infallible clue in the diagnosis of cancer, Soviet scientists have found.

With the help of the deadly gas, they declare, the presence of cancer in human beings can be detected long before any outward symptoms appear. And, since cancer in its earliest stages responds readily to treatment, chlorine has reversed its functions and is saving lives instead of ending them.

The gist of sweeping experiments with chlorine, carried on at the Research Institute of Physiology at Saratov, a large manufacturing town on the lower Volga, is simple.

Chlorine, passing into the blood stream in limited quantities, breaks down the haemoglobin of cancerous persons, it is asserted, changes its color from red to yellow and impairs its capacity to crystallize. But the gas has no effect upon the blood of normal persons, and the process of diagnosing cancer consists simply in observing the change or lack of change in the blood of the suspect, after he has inhaled chlorine gas.

Accidental Discovery

It was entirely by accident that the chlorine method of diagnosing cancer was discovered two years ago, though since that time it has become a recognized process, at least in Soviet Russia.

The Saratov scientists were experimenting with the gas as a possible cure for the common cold, influenza and other ailments of the respiratory organs when they discovered its applicability to cancer.

Cold and influenza patients as well as sufferers from scarlet fever and certain diseases of the ears and passages of the head were placed in a specially constructed tank where, for half an hour, they breathed air mixed with chlorine in weak concentrations.

Several cures were obtained, it is asserted, but one thing puzzled the experimenters. Making extensive medical examinations of their patients after the chlorine inhalation, they observed that the blood of some had undergone changes, while that of others remained the same.

It was Prof. M. Tsvetkov, head of the Institute, who hit upon the solution. Those whose blood had changed were sufferers not only from colds, but also from cancer in one stage or another, he suggested. And immediately large-scale tests were set afoot to confirm his theory.

More than 70 persons, ranging from some only slightly affected to men and women who suffered from the dread disease in its malignant stages were rounded up from local hospitals for tests.

All, it was noted, showed blood changes after inhalation of chlorine. "Controls," known to be free from the disease, like the bulk of cold and influenza patients, displayed no such changes.

Meanwhile, the tests were carried further. Relatives of the known cancer sufferers—direct kin—brothers, sisters, mothers and fathers, were brought to the Institute and placed in the chlorine tank.

Their blood reacted just as did that of the known cancer sufferers, though few, previously had displayed any outward signs of the disease.

Cancer Hereditary

And the final stage of the experiments was reached when several, unsuspected before, but showing the typical blood changes after chlorine inhalation, submitted to other tests and were shown positively to be infected.

Two conclusions are drawn by Dr. Tsvetkov from the data already gathered, although the experiments are not yet complete. "It has been demonstrated," he declares, "that cancer is indubitably hereditary, in many cases. But the child of a cancerous parent may develop the outward signs of the disease long before its father or mother. And the cancer may even remain latent in one generation to appear in the next."

That is his first conclusion. The second related practically to the diagnosis and cure of the disease.

"Our experiments have shown that the chlorine process reveals not only active cancer itself," he says, "but a state of what might be termed pre-cancer. We are now able, by this process, to diagnose the disease before it takes active form and thus to prevent the transition from pre-cancer into the malignant stage of the disease."

The chlorine method, the scientist asserts, will infallibly reveal the presence of the disease, even in its earliest stages. And periodic chlorine tests of all persons, coupled with subsequent determination of their blood reactions, he believes, should go far to stamp out cancer deaths.

Chlorine, he thinks, can save more lives in peace than it destroyed in war.

MEMORIAL SERVICE HELD FOR LANGHORNE FIREMEN

Rev. H. Cunningham Delivers
Sermon On "National Repentance Act"

THREE DIED IN YEAR

LANGHORNE, Jan. 30—The volunteer firemen and the Ladies Auxiliary on Sunday attended a memorial service at the Presbyterian Church. The special affair opened with a request music program by Earle Felton. Every member of each organization was given a white carnation by retired fire chief Pearce Candy.

A special choir composed of Earle Felton, Edith Campbell, Beatrice Sylvester, Mary Craven, Ethel Felton, Gladys Sylvester, Evelyn C. Stompler, Russell Stompler and Freeman Hagar, sang two anthems, "I Thank Thee God" and "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go."

Before the address, reports of those who had died during the past year were made. Joseph Harris reported the deaths of Messrs. Joseph Andrassy, Franklin Bridges and Harvey Ivins. Mrs. Louis Schlatter, secretary of the auxiliary, reported no deaths. One guest of the evening was Samuel Beach, who has for 62 years been an active member of the Morristown, N. J. volunteer fire company.

The Rev. Henry Cunningham's sermon was on the NRA, the "National Repentance Act". He pointed out that all great leaders have been men of Christ and prayer. He quoted from the lines of Washington and Lincoln in particular; and commended the firemen on their work during the mid-winter fire in the sub-zero weather of last week. He closed with a special invocation that God would continue to protect these protectors of human life.

JUDGE KELLER TALKS TO EAGLE SCOUT CANDIDATES

Advises Them at Doylestown
Session On Their Citizenship
Opportunities

TO BE RECOGNIZED SOON

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 30—President Judge Hiram H. Keller of the Bucks County Court spoke to the Eagle Scout candidates, Monday afternoon. In Court Room No. 2, Judge Keller is a member of the Bucks County Council Boy Scout Executive Board, and Chairman of the Court of Honor Committee. One of his annual responsibilities is to advise the highest Scout rank candidates on their citizenship opportunities. The Eagle Scouts appearing before him will be recognized before the annual County Court of Honor, which will be conducted on Sunday afternoon, February 10th, 2:30 p. m.

"It is a source of pride that there are so many of you who have had the energy, and the ambition to strive for the highest goal in Scouting," said Judge Keller, to the Scouts looking forward to the day when they will be presented with their Eagle Scout Badge. "It means something to be an Eagle Scout. You are becoming a pace setter for other boys in your communities. Your conduct should continue to be of the best, as you are an Outstanding Scout to your playmates."

"Scouting is a well regulated plan of education for the right use of your leisure or what most boys call 'free time.' I advise each of you to keep physically fit, mentally alert, and morally straight."

"Several of you are over twenty-one, and others of you will soon reach your majority. At that age, you will enter into your rights as a citizen. Assert your opinion frankly, and honestly on public issues by registering your thought through your vote. It is your primary duty as a citizen to go to the polls on election day. The government cannot react to public opinion through its three branches of executive, legislative, and judicial; unless, you vote."

"Never forget the effort, and sacrifice it has taken to establish our country, and to give to you your schools, freedom of thought, and the right for you to observe your own choice of religious faith. You should always remind yourself of how our country came into existence, what our founders thought of, and what they had to go through."

"Participate in your community life, be active in your church, help your school, and look forward to leading others in Scouting. Serve others better by your having been fortunate enough to have had someone interested in serving you."

President Thomas Ross met the Scouts at his office for a few moments of greeting. Mr. Ross expressed the hope of the Executive Board, that, each applicant will be successful in passing the Eagle Scout Review Board. It is necessary for each candidate to receive a rating of eighty-five percent on a review of all of his merit badges for him to be eligible to receive his badge. The review board is composed of Eagle Scouts who have the responsibility of maintaining the standards of the rank.

The review Monday afternoon and evening was conducted at County Headquarters, and Judge Keller's Library. The Class Requirement Examiner was Assistant Scoutmaster William F. Adams, of Riegelsville. Scoutmaster O. Kenneth Fretz of Quakertown No. 2, and Assistant Scoutmaster Vance B. Forepaugh of Treviso were Chairmen of the two receiving boards. Associated with each of the chairmen were Gerald Biehn of Quakertown No. 2, Frederick H. Clymer, Jr., of Doylestown No. 1, George P. Godown of Riegelsville, and Francis L. Ritter, of Quakertown No. 2.

COME FROM ALL STATES

NEW HOPE, Jan. 30—Artists from Bucks County have several exhibits at the 120th annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, which opened this week in Philadelphia.

Bucks Countians are represented in the 257 paintings which come from every state in the union by the following:

Daniel Garber, Lumberville, who was chairman of the jury of selection and awards, shows one of his most satisfactory canvases, a snow scene of the Durham valley. It is easily one of the leading works of its kind on view.

Edward W. Redford, Center Bridge, shows two canvases, one a Summer scene, "Birch Grove," and one of his famous Winter landscapes. Another Winter scene is "Workhouse Quarry" by John Felinsbee, New Hope. The late afternoon glow of sunlight is the striking note in this canvas.

The contribution of Arthur Meltzer, Langhorne, is a highly poetic scene, entitled "Once a Mighty Oak." The gnarled tree which is the center object overlooks a typical Bucks county scene. The tree is lighted by mellow, late afternoon sunlight.

Elizabeth M. Price, New Hope, shows a decorative farm view, the title being "Picking Potatoes."

"The Treasure Seeker" is a unique subject by William Lathrop, dean of the Delaware Valley colony. This depicts a rowboat on an island on which a group of young men are exploring. A glint of light strikes the stern of the boat, the only bit of strong color on the entire canvas.

"Men From The Works," showing a group of laborers returning from a busy industrial plant, is contributed by Walter E. Baum, Sellersville. This subject is a departure from his usual Winter landscape paintings.

EX-POLICE-CHIEF AND WIFE 'FRAMED' HER, WOMAN TESTIFIES

Startling Testimony Brought Out at Hearing in Camden Court

HUSBAND IS SUING HER

Couple Were Former Residents of Croydon for Quite Some Time

(By International News Service)
CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 30—Additional details of the marital rift dividing William H. Cloud, 57-year-old Palmyra, N. J., fruit preserve manufacturer and his 38-year-old wife, Viola, were to be aired here today with resumption of the hearing on the husband's divorce action.

Outstanding in the testimony thus far at the hearing before Advisory Master in Chancery, William I. Kraft, was the joint declaration from the witness stand to the effect they had "framed" Mrs. Cloud, made by John J. McGuckin, of Pensauken, a private detective and formerly chief of police of Bristol, Pa., and his wife, Edna. The latter formerly lived in Croydon, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. McGuckin testified they had "framed" the defendant in a Philadelphia hotel, to enable her to "get rid of her husband." Mrs. McGuckin's testimony was particularly important to the complainant. She declared from the stand that she worked as a detective, aiding her husband, and that she had gained the confidence of Mrs. Cloud. The detective's wife further asserted that on one occasion, Mrs. Cloud had expressed the wish she could get $1,000 so that she could "get rid of her husband."

On March 18, 1933, Mrs. McGuckin, according to her testimony, told Mrs. Cloud she had an apartment in Philadelphia where they could go and "wait for a couple of boy friends." They went to the Philadelphia apartment, Mrs. McGuckin declared, and soon McGuckin and another man, introduced as Gene McCordle, appeared at the place. McCordle was to be Mrs. Cloud's companion. Mrs. McGuckin testified, and she and her husband left the pair alone in the room. Later, Mrs. McGuckin said she looked through an open door and found McCordle and Mrs. Cloud in an embrace.

An illustrated lecture was also given in the form of a talking picture. Three reels of interesting scenes based on the National Modernization plan were shown. County Chairman Horace J. Palmer and local chairman Chauncey E. Stoneback, Jr., also addressed the meeting.

CONNIE MACK IS WRONG

Connie Mack's idea that the big leagues adopt a uniform salary for players to prevent the game from collapsing financially is an example of a sort of economy which has destroyed many an enterprise in trying times. Connie Mack last week told an interviewer that he hopes to be managing the Athletics when he is 80, and possibly he will if the shrewd heads in base ball—Mr. Navin, Col. Ruppert and others—preserve him from the folly of the standard wage for players.

The player for the game's sake is an extinct type, and today the sole incentive to superior effort is the athlete's hope of an increasing reward. In this he differs not at all from other artisans who vary in skill and aptitude for their jobs.

The big leagues find it increasingly difficult to find new material in the bushes, and the top salaries now paid their stars are the one inducement they have to offer the little they do discover. An economy that leveled salaries in base ball would also level the base ball structure. For once the Tall Tactician seems to have misread the situation.

AN UNIQUE ART

Very few people are aware of the fact that the type they read in their newspapers, magazines, books and advertising has been designed by someone; that there is an art which has to do solely with the designing of new type faces. Reading has become so commonplace that most adult readers have forgotten that there are letters of the alphabet. So long as they do not intrude themselves due to some peculiarity letters do not impress the reader's consciousness. The art of the type designer paradoxically aims at impressing the reader by being inconspicuous. He is constantly striving to create letters that are more legible and which make the printed page more beautiful.

One of the world's foremost members of this craft, Frederick W. Goudy, spent 35 years designing 73 type faces. Although few recognize his name all who read see specimens of his handwork daily.

His art means this to him:

"The main purpose of making letters is the practical one of making thoughts visible. However, they have as well a decided decorative quality, quite apart from any ornamental treatment of the separate characters. Letters need only to be simple, well shaped and well proportioned. Beauty is not to be sought at the expense of practical use."

How different from most of the other arts is the art of type design.

A New Jersey fan who dropped a balcony chair on a wrestler's head has been jailed. This senseless destruction of property must be firmly dealt with.

Oklahoma shows a nice change of pace in its governors. The new one affects a top hat, and in the first three days hadn't called out the militia once.

"THE LADY DANCES" by MARGE STANLEY

CHAPTER XIX
Downers

The talk was of sudden wealth when Mark, still full of troublesome doubts of Vanya, wandered over to Loring's tree next morning. He found that worthy trading stories with one of the Ellice's crew—rumors of rich finds, giant pearls, treasure on remote islets. Mark listened again—as who hadn't in the islands—to the story of the great black pearl that had made the fortune of "Luckless" Parke, the rem known in the markets as "The Eye of Allah."

Loring responded with the tale of a pearler trying his luck off lonely Haynet Rock. On the third descent, the diver, he asserted, had brought up a malformed oyster—a freak—and the man in the boat had pried it open immediately. There, in the fleshy folds of the mollusc, for just an instant, had flashed a veritable pearl of pearls! A great pink, radiant gem, perfect in form and gigantic in size, a fortune for its finder. Just an instant, and the great gem, slippery with oyster slime, had flashed elusively out of their fingers, and dropped into the clear waters. Loring told of the desperate faces craned to watch its sinking, and how, drawn by the luminous flash, a great Ophid, the original king-fish, had darted in a rose and green streak from beneath the boat, and swallowed the priceless, shining globule! And how the pearler's crew, abandoning diving, had taken to fishing, and had fished the vicinity for weeks in a vain attempt to capture the guilty Ophid!

"And they're still at it!" concluded Loring. "The ships that pass Haynet Rock still bring back stories of the perpetual fisherman, and they say the crew is springing gills and growing scales from a steady fish diet!"

The story was well received. The seaman ruffled, and departed to repeat it to his shipmates at the bar, and even Mark's moroseness yielded a hearty chuckle.

"Not even a drink," mourned Loring.

"I owe you a quart, and I'll stand you a drink, soon Vanya."

"No. And I can't use your quart—not by day-light. No fun at all, getting spilt by day; the cold light brings out one's deficiencies too clearly."

"You're a connoisseur of decadence."

"Just an artist," grinned the beachcomber. "By the way, is this bruise in the shape of a boot-print a memento from you?"

"I needed your advice," said Mark, stalling in remembrance, "which you gave."

He thought suddenly of Loring's bemused answer to his query. "Try the acid test." Might be good advice, at that!

"Listen here," said the beachcomber abruptly. "My last night's advice, whatever it was, is probably valueless, but I've an opinion or two to render now, and the first is that you're a fool."

Mark wasn't irritated; the other's manner had a disarming air of banter, underlain by a serious tone.

"I've been called so by those better qualified to judge than you, I responded with a grin.

"No one's better qualified than I," said Loring. "A fool is always a better judge of fools than any wise man."

The fool knows his subject from the very fundamentals of his own experience, from the inside, as it were; the wise man gets all his knowledge of fools from hearsay."

"Then you qualify as an expert indeed," said Mark. "What of it?"

"Just this: Your particular brand of foolery lies in blinding yourself to certain very obvious facts, because, I suppose, they're unpleasant facts, or because they offend your pride, or some other equally valid reason."

"For instance?" queried Mark.

"For instance Vanya. You're in love with her, you know!"

"I certainly am not!" exclaimed Mark vehemently. "On the contrary, I dislike her strenuously. Simply because I admire her obvious beauty is no sign I'm in love with her!"

"No one," said Loring dryly, "could possibly be as beautiful as you seem to think she is. And furthermore, no person but a horn artist will chase an impersonal idea of beauty over a whole ocean. It's not the beauty you were pursuing. It's the lady."

Mark was thoroughly startled by Loring's accusations. The possibility he had never admitted to himself stared him in the face through the other's blunt words, and he hardly knew how to reply.

"Moreover," continued the beachcomber relentlessly, "I don't care how you describe the emotion to yourself—call it fascination, infatuation, or obsession; it doesn't alter the fact."

"Lord!" groaned Mark. "You're a brutal devil!"

"Like the surgeon and his knife," said Loring. "For your own good. You Yankees aren't made for the "One couldn't believe anything bad of her," muttered Mark, "to look at that lovely face of hers!"

"How old is the lady?" queried Loring irrelevantly.

"Fourteen, the first year of the war—that makes her twenty-one."

"Well," mused the beachcomber, "one can fall a long way in twenty-one years. It took me only a decade longer to reach my level."

"That's a consolation."

"It is Vanya can't possibly be assigned to the same level, you see; she must, by logical inference, occupy a higher one, since she looks down on me. That's a self-evident fact, isn't it?"

"Your cursed verbal pyrotechnics!" snarled Mark. "A lot of help they are!"

"Have they earned me a drink?" grinned Loring.

"Come on," Mark paused suddenly. "That's it!" he exclaimed abruptly.

"That's which?"

"I've got it! The acid test—the Trial by Fire!"

"She'd be a sensation on the American stage," observed Mark, watching the flash of Vanya's white smile limbo through the rents of the vagabond-like costume she wore.

"Wrong as usual," contradicted his cynical companion. "Her features are too delicate to cross the footlights, though she might make the cinema. Still, that hint of intelligence in her face might just even that chance, judging from some of your screen epics."

"You're a cold proposition," laughed Mark.

Vanya was singing now. Her eyes passed coolly over Mark, ignoring his tentative smile.

tropics. Your cool, logical characters soften, disintegrate, go to pieces, under the equator, like mine."

Mark had no reply to make. He was dazed, upset, and thoroughly puzzled.

"That's your danger," proceeded his tormenter. "Suppose you had her under your familiar temperate sky; suppose this exotic, romantic, poisoning tropic background were lacking. How would you feel then? Would she hold her charm in your eyes? Would a prosaic background destroy her lure? Is she attractive only by virtue of contrast with her undesirable associates, and would the competition of cultured women topple the illusion of her superiority? What do you think?"

"I don't know," muttered Mark. "What do you think?"

"What I think doesn't matter. The moral angle, which means so much to you provincials, doesn't affect my opinion, and that makes my likes and dislikes utterly meaningless to you. But personally, I like her, despite her poor estimate of me. In fact, her prejudice does her credit!"

"Oh Lord!" groaned Mark. "If I only believed her story!"

"So she told one, then. That's the moral question again, you see. Is she fit for the company of decent women? Could I take her into my home, to meet my sister, my mother? The New England standard!"

"Haven't you any standard?" flared Mark.

"I have my code. Didn't I just refuse your offer of a drink? Now I feel I've earned the right to one, after this conversation. I'll accept your next offer gracefully."

"The devil! You're as consoling as an ugly-tongued traffic cop."

"And I serve a parallel purpose. I point out wherein you've failed to observe certain well-established rules and regulations. The amount of the fine, of course, is up to you."

There is too much burden carried by real estate. One hundred years ago real estate was the principle wealth of Pennsylvania and rightfully carried its just share. But today real estate comprises 30% of the wealth of the State but pays approximately 90% of the burden of local taxes. The fair-minded citizen and home owner should know the exact truth of the conditions and lend their support to the three organizations in their valiant fight.

V. There is a relationship between real estate and fire protection, police protection, streets, highways, roadways, street lighting, sewers, etc., for which real estate should and does bear the burden. There is, however, no relationship between real estate and education, and real estate should not bear this burden.

Tax limitation is one certain means of putting to an end the extravagant waste of taxpayers' money for unnecessary public improvements.

The ever-increasing taxation on real estate has now reached the confiscation stage. Confiscation by taxation of the home or farm is the one certain road to destruction of citizenship.

One-fourth of real estate taxes have gone unpaid each year for the past four years, leaving the other three-fourths to carry the entire burden; each year the delinquency of taxpayers becomes greater.

Each week a subject will be discussed by the Board. Comments and helpful subject matter can be addressed to Secretary, Bucks County Real Estate Board, Langhorne, Penna.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Elsfeld, Newark, N. J., will arrive the end of the week to pay a week's visit to Mrs. Elsfeld's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Williams, Wood street.

Cross-examining Mrs. McGuckin, Attorney Herman Nekstein, of New Brunswick, Mrs. Cloud's counsel, drew from the witness the admission she is the mother of three children. He asked Mrs. McGuckin whether she had any scruples about "framing" people and the witness replied she had no scruples in the matter because that was part of her work in helping her husband.

Cloud himself was called to testify and he declared that in addition to $30 a week he gave his wife to run the household, he was compelled to pay her five cents each time she dressed their three-year-old child.

Another witness was Mrs. Helen Lomina, of Croydon, wife of Joseph Lomina, one of the men Cloud alleged was friendly with his wife. Mrs. Lomina said her husband had spent "not one, but 200 nights at Mrs. Cloud's home."

Once Mrs. Lomina testified, she hurled a brick at Mrs. Cloud in an argument over the former's husband, and on another occasion she testified she waited all night in front of Mrs. Cloud's home for her husband to emerge.

Cloud candied pineapple in Bristol for quite some time.

HEATING HINTS

.. by John Barclay

DO YOU know that the greatest waste in connection with home heating is what heating experts call "Chimney Loss"—the heat wasted up the chimney?

It is a simple matter to reduce this loss to an absolute minimum by using a little care in adjusting the Turn Damper—(that disc or plate-like damper inside the smoke pipe). Let me explain how this is done:

The next time you fix the fire, move the handle of the Turn Damper 1/16th of an inch toward the closed up-right position. If the fire continues to burn freely, turn it another sixteenth of an inch. Repeat this operation until you find the ideal adjustment that will give you the greatest amount of useful heat with the minimum of chimney loss. Then take a piece of chalk and mark this position on the smoke pipe and leave the damper there.

Remember, the nearer the Turn Damper is to the closed position the smaller the chimney loss. (7)
